

DAWES TOUCHES AGRICULTURE IN LINCOLN SPEECH

Says The Republicans Promise Only Best Efforts

LINCOLN, Neb., Aug. 29. (AP)—Removal of the agricultural problem for politics and its solution by an impartial, non-partisan, competent commission under the same methods of procedure as brought an end to the European reparations tangle, was advocated here tonight by Charles G. Dawes, Republican candidate for vice-president. Mr. Dawes, speaking to an audience in the University of Nebraska Memorial Stadium which included many old friends and neighbors who had given him an enthusiastic welcome earlier in the day to his former home town of Lincoln, declared the agriculture question should be discussed from the standpoint of national interest and not party interest.

"This question is a national question," he asserted. "It is a non-partisan and economic question. It must not be and cannot be discussed or settled as a party question."

The Republican vice-presidential nominee declared the causes of agricultural distress to be fundamental with conditions resulting from the world war as the great underlying factor, and the solutions for the problem so numerous and diverse that the best only could be undertaken with promise of success by such a national commission as has been proposed and will shortly be appointed by President Coolidge.

"The most popular means of bidding for votes is by promising the achievement of all that the voters most earnestly desire," he added. "We make but one promise, that the Republican party, utilizing the best minds and those by training best fitted for the task, will bend every effort to the study of our agricultural problem to the end that, thru legislation or other means, its solution may be accomplished. Whoever promises more than this is entering into a contract which cannot be filled."

Mr. Dawes deliberately selected this city in the corn belt with the great northwestern wheat regions not far away as the point from which to send out his message in agricultural situation—an address on which he spent more time and energy than all his other speeches put together. His old friends in Lincoln returned the compliment by decorating the city with green stalks of corn and by staging a parade in which more than 100 men marched carrying stalks of Nebraska's principal crop.

The nominee came to Nebraska at a time when the hopes of its farmers had been raised by improvement in crop prospects and by increased prices but in his speech tonight he, which he explained were due to operation of the law of supply and demand, were not permanent, and that a lasting solution must be arranged.

Mr. Dawes analyzed the agriculture problem which he stated in the most simple terms, a to how equality in earning capacity can be secured between agriculture and industry.

Disagrees with Davis
He disagreed with John W. Davis, Democratic nominee for president that reduction of the tariff would solve it declaring that the position agricultural relief is evidence that they regard properly, the protective tariff and restricted immigration more as a moral justification of the demands for agricultural relief than as a cause of the recent depression.

Mr. Dawes was introduced by Mark Woods one of the first men in Nebraska to propose the nomination of the former Nebraskan as vice-president. Mr. Woods reference to ratification of the Dawes reparations plan today by the German reichstag was loudly cheered.

The nominee began his discussion of campaign issues with a discussion of what he termed "the greatest issue in this campaign—the constitution of the"

HEROIC ACTIONS OF SEAMEN IN SAVING FUEL HELPS AIRMEN

Work Full Half of Night in Icy Waters Following Storm

ABOARD U. S. S. RICHMOND AT ICE TICKLE, Labrador, Aug. 29. (AP)—The heroism of former Lieutenant George Vovle, U. S. Naval Reserve, in charge of fuels and supplies at Indian Harbor, and Seaman Joseph Bowl and William Cahill of the destroyer Lawrence, in rescuing 18 drums of fuel, after battling in icy water up to their necks during the sixty mile gale Wednesday night, has saved the flight of the American world fliers from indefinite postponement.

The story was related today by Lieutenant Noville, on coming aboard the Richmond, after 70 hours of vigilance on duty, ashore. Noville's camp was inundated during the storm, and drums, weighing 450 pounds each, broke loose, and began pounding on the rocks. Men tried to recapture the drums but their boats capsized in the freezing water. They battled with the elements from 7 in the evening until midnight, and finally lashed the drums together and dragged them to the beach. The men remained awake the rest of the night, soaked to the skin, but at dawn they removed their clothing and refreshed each other by means of alcoholic rub downs. The trio are none the worse for their experience. The plight of the party was discovered today by the cruiser Richmond, which sent food, dry clothing, and a dry tent to their post.

Had the drums of fuel not been recaptured the fliers on the arrival would have been without supplies, the nearest fuel being at Hawkes Bay, New Foundland.

On Board U. S. S. Richmond, at Ice Tickle, Labrador, Aug. 29. (AP)—So far as weather conditions are concerned tonight the prospects of Lieutenant Lowell H. Smith and Lieutenant Erik Nelson having a clear pathway across the north Atlantic ocean from Greenland to Labrador if they decide to hop off tomorrow morning appeared good.

German Passage Of Dawes Plan Assured

BERLIN, Aug. 29. (AP)—The turnabout by forty eight German Nationalists reichstag deputies late this afternoon gave the Marx-Stresemann government a comfortable majority in favor of the London reparations agreement. The sensational flop by the reactionaries was ostentatiously concealed up to the time balloting on the railway bill began, both the bank and debenture laws having previously been adopted by rising votes.

In support of the railway bill 317 votes were cast as against 124 votes in opposition which came from the communists and the Landendorff, and 48 Nationalist members, the government receiving a majority considerably in excess of the constitutional two-thirds requirements.

The voting on the London agreement supplied a spectacular climax to four weeks of acrimonious partisan warfare on the Dawes report, the bulk of which was supplied by the German Nationalist party which up to 24 hours ago kept an attitude of militant opposition to the London agreement and Marx government.

The government by reason of this fact was forced into a position where it had determined to dissolve the reichstag and ratify the agreement on its own responsibilities in the event that the Herr Von Tirpitz party refused to yield.

No issue which engaged German post-war parliaments had produced a flood of partisan acerbities and political dissensions of equal vehemence, both in the reichstag and among the scores of party organs and in political circles today's vote is clearly described as a signal victory for the Marx-Stresemann government which, before and since the conference in London, had conducted a sturdy, above board, fight for the adoption of the Dawes plan.

COOLIDGE SAYS FRATERNITY IS HELP TO NATION

Addresses National Fraternal Congress of America

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—Lauding the purposes of fraternalism President Coolidge today told delegates to the National Fraternal Congress of America in convention here that true fraternalism were strong restraints of ordered government, according to the public law.

Mr. Coolidge in his address delivered from the south portico of the white house did not mention by name any fraternal order or secret society nor did he touch directly on politics or campaign issues. Outlining the "homely virtues,"—industry, thrift, loyalty, common sense, faith and the golden rule—the president said he endorsed fraternalism because that spirit attempted "to translate these ideals into daily life and action."

"The rituals of nearly all fraternal organizations," he added, "are based upon religion. No true fraternity can rest on any other conception. It is for these reasons that they are the supporters of the aims of society, strong restraints of ordered government, according to public law, able advocates of the cause of righteousness and religion and good will among the nations of the earth."

Mr. Coolidge wrote most of the address during his stay at Plymouth, Vt., and it dealt at length on his views of the homely virtues as he described them.

The usual Friday cabinet meeting was held during the day the various cabinet members who have been away during the summer joining with the chief executive in an hour's session in picking up threads of business again. Nothing special was considered it was said. It was said the president has no plans for a speaking trip during the campaign and has not received any late reports on the political situation from William M. Butler, chairman of the Republican national committee.

BOTH OF 'CHARLEYS' SO DEAR TO LINCOLN ARE GUESTS OF TOWN

Bryan, Without Radio, Must Wait for Speech in Paper

LINCOLN, Neb., Aug. 29. (AP)—The invasion of Lincoln's Republican "Charley" into the home of Lincoln's Democratic "Charley" presented a coincidence here tonight rarely seen in national politics.

Charles G. Dawes, who began his career here 37 years ago in law practice and who has since gained prominence in world affairs came home to tell his old friends what he stands for as the Republican candidate for vice-president.

Charles Bryan, who more than thirty years ago came here as a tobacco merchant and drummer of fraternal insurance, and who has since risen to the highest of office in the gift of the state, sat quietly in his home opposite the state capitol frankly hoping the weather man would be kind to his opponent for the vice-presidency.

The vice-presidential nominee was anxious to see—and he had to wait for the morning newspapers, there being no radio in the executive mansion—what his political adversary had to say on agriculture, a question Governor Bryan will stress next Monday at Elk Point, S. D. Altho "Lincoln's own" in the political sphere had not met, tonight indications were that the two candidates would have an opportunity tomorrow to greet each other socially.

WEEKS DECLARES EIGHTY PERCENT "NON-RESISTERS"

Says Most of Object- ors to Defense Day of That Class

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—Analyzing arguments against defense test day, September 12, Secretary Weeks paid high tribute tonight to American patriotic organizations and executive of states, cities and towns at a dinner following a day's session devoted to pledging co-operation to the government in the test and explaining its purpose.

Religious sects "who are conscientious non-resisters" and "professional pacifists" were estimated by the secretary as forming about 8 percent of the "organizational protests against the defense test."

He denied that the test was a "militaristic gesture" or that it would be accepted as such in any foreign quarter.

National executives of the veteran and patriotic organizations which participated in today's gathering also addressed the night session. Resolutions pledging support and urging that defense test day be taken out of partisan politics, were adopted unanimously during the day. Officers of the army headed by Major General John L. Hines, deputy chief of staff, had previously outlined the purpose and development of the test. The day sessions were held in Memorial Continental Hall, headquarters of the Daughters of the American Revolution whose president, Mrs. Anthony Wayne Cook issued the call for the meeting.

Louis E. Arenberg, newly elected commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic injected some fireworks into the session when he attacked the Daughters of the Confederacy for not being listed, he said, among the units supporting defense day. The presiding officer, however, immediately afterward announced that he had just been informed that the Daughters had endorsed the test.

Secretary Weeks in his dinner address declared "the test has been justified by its support," in that it had been invaluable in bringing to the attention of the government the groups that "can be relied on."

Explaining the purpose of the test the war secretary said it was intended to test the plans for the expansion of our army in case of war and to visualize the benefit of each community the forces which that community would be called upon to produce in a national emergency.

PRINCE IS NOT ENGAGED, SO HE TELLS REPORTER

Is Silent When Asked if He Would Marry American Girl

NEW YORK, Aug. 29. (AP)—Edward, Prince of Wales arrived today.

Slightly built and diffident, he blushed while newspaper correspondents thronged about him in greeting of his second visit to the United States. Three army airplanes hovered over the liner Berengaria and thousands of persons ashore and on small boats around the ship strained their eyes for a sight of the distinguished young Englishman.

Soon he climbed down a ladder to a private yacht which took him to Glen Cove, on the North Shore of Long Island, whence he journeyed by motor to the home of Jane A. Bruden at 87 St. He will depart early tomorrow morning for Washington, to be the guest of President Coolidge at luncheon.

Returning to Syosett, he will stay there for about two weeks. The prince, wearing a blue shirt and collar and a sack suit of light gray, looked more like a college boy than a man of thirty years reared to be a king.

"Experts divide in opinion on autumn trade" says a financial report.

Perhaps it is true that conditions in the industrial field are perplexing, that the steel demand is slow, that cotton mills are still closed. True also that this is a presidential year, with its psychology of holding off in every line until election is over.

Nevertheless the fundamentals of all prosperity still hold. Every man can get ahead faster than the procession or lag behind it if he will. His own success depends, as it always has done in all years, presidential or otherwise, on his own initiative, foresight and homely hard work.

The man whose business is dull may stimulate it by effective advertising. Shelves, windows and whole departments may be put in more attractive order, fall campaigns mapped out. The young lawyer whose doors do not open often enough on clients or organizing new businesses can read a little more law, preparing to handle clients with more dispatch when they begin to fill the waiting room. In every trade, every profession, every line of business or industry, just as in the army, it is the work behind the lines that supports the advance.

When business is brisk there is little time for the careful thought and study which maintains and improves it and lays foundation for steady growth in fair times or dull. But when "conditions are perplexing," the man who sits around dully waiting for times to improve, who spends precious time mourning with his mates about their dullness, is doing nothing to improve his own line or the general situation.

On the other hand, the man who seizes a brief quiet time as an opportunity to do a little hard thinking, a little solid planning, an ordering and preparing of himself and his work before the rush begins, is the man whose own business never goes under.

VERMONT SIMPLICITY

President Coolidge has gone back to Washington after a vacation at his old Vermont home. As one paper puts it, "Now Cal is going to begin his chores down at the national capital." While the president has been in Vermont camera men have been busy and newspapers the country over have reproduced pictures of the president, clad in overalls, attending to some of the simple farm tasks.

Ordinarily these pictures would have the appearance of political propaganda, purposing to attract the interest and support of the rural population. These pictures have special appeal to E. H. Rowe who was born in Vermont and spent his boyhood days there.

"All that was needed," Mr. Rowe said, "to complete the picture of Vermont farm life, was to show the president picking up stones after a plow, for that is the common practice in the rocky soil of Vermont."

Mark Sullivan, famous as a writer on political and public affairs, in mentioning the Coolidge farm pictures, says that the simplicity of the place may seem to some people staged, but that to anyone familiar with life in the Green Mountains of Vermont that the pictures are entirely true to life.

Vermonters for the most part live simple lives. This is especially true of those who dwell upon the farms and who live their lives in the country.

The history of the state and nation show the effect of Vermont atmosphere, for sturdy character is a product of that state in much larger percentage than is true of some other states wider of boundary and more fertile of soil.

"KID MCCOY" AND MOTHER LOVE.

"Kid McCoy" loves and always has loved his mother, we are told. She says he is and always has been "a good boy" to her. At 2 o'clock of the morning, after the crime of which he is accused had taken place, he went to his mother's home to tell her that he loved her. Now he is in jail and face to face with a charge that may cause his death at the hands of the law.

"Kid McCoy" no doubt loved his mother as a little child loves. She was good to turn to for solace and sympathy and affection when weariness came and hurts and troubles. But "Kid McCoy" does not and never has loved his mother as the Divine admonition contemplates. Never has his life been guided or influenced by that love.

"Honor thy father and thy mother" was not laid down as a rule of conduct for babies. It does not mean simply a carous, a tender word, a bit of devotion, a gesture of loyalty. Love, big and abiding and controlling, is its perfect definition. It means that man shall so live and so conduct himself as to reflect honor upon himself not alone but upon her who went down into the valley of the shadow to bring him back, a helpless babe.

Men who give such a love as this expression in their daily walks and living do not know fear and easy morals—do not find themselves confronting the galleys, as "Kid McCoy" does today and as other men have done before him. Real filial affection cannot consort with crime.

SHADOWS OF THE PAST

BY ALBERT APPLE

Radical changes in airplane designs are expected to result from the experiments of Professor Bjerknes, the Norwegian. Before the meeting of the British Association for Advancement of Science, he demonstrates his new style of airplane.

It has whirling cylinders instead of wings. These cylinders, shaped like tin cans, revolve swiftly. The technical explanation of how they work is complicated.

Man gets his new ideas by studying and adapting things that already exist in nature. When man wanted to fly, he naturally started out with the idea that his airplanes must have wings like a bird or insect. The plane you see soaring overhead looks as if it were a huge dragon fly or hawk.

Similarly, the first railroad passenger cars looked like stagecoaches. The first autos looked like horse-drawn buggies. The first typewriter keyboard was a copy of a piano's, even to black and white keys in a row.

It's hard to shake off the precedent of the past. Old ideas cling and modify new ideas. It is as if man, venturing into the new, fears totally to discard the old; he clings to the old as a life preserver.

But as the new ideas develop, especially new inventions, the old is gradually shaken off. The time may be ripe for the airplane to cease looking like a bird or insect. Who knows—the final perfection of the airplane may look like a spider, a rat or a rubber ball.

Prices
Cost of living is 62 percent higher than before the war—$1.52 needed to buy what cost $1 in July, 1914. For rents the figure is 85 instead of 62. These are latest statistics from National Industrial Conference Board. They cover the needs of a wageearner with five in family. And they represent an average for the whole country. In some districts, cost of living is higher, in others it's lower.

Only consolation is that the longrange tendency is downward.

Abreast
Are you getting $1.62 for every $1 you were paid in wages or salary before the war? If not, your income hasn't kept pace with cost of living.

In England, where wage-earners are powerfully organized, wages rise or fall with living costs. It's the fair, scientific way. Inevitably we'll come to it in time.

Woolworth
The Woolworth 5-and-10-cent stores expect to sell 220 million dollars worth of goods this year, according to their vice president. That means over two billion dimes tinkling into the cash registers. Woolworth little dreamed of such possibilities when he started his first "notion store" on a small scale.

In the 5-and-10-cent store, merchandising has reached its highest development. Gradually the system will expand to include all forms of retail business. Observe the many chain stores already.

Panama
In a year 5448 ocean-going ships passed through Panama Canal, says official report. Without the canal, they'd have had to make the long trip around the southwesternmost tip of South America.

Uncle Sam has been collecting almost 25 million dollars a year in tolls from these ships. Our national investment in the canal is paying around 4 percent interest. Originally there was no hope of much profit, for the canal is primarily for increased navy efficiency. Becoming more valuable for enabling ships to keep railroads on their toes, by competition.

CONVENTION AT WHITE HALL ENDS SESSIONS

Greene-Jersey Baptist Association in Final Sessions of Convention—Other White Hall News

White Hall, Aug. 29.—With an address last night by Rev. Lewis Koehler of Normal, state superintendent of young people's work, the convention of the Greene-Jersey Baptist association in First Baptist church here, after a close Thursday session, Rev. Carney of Kane delivered the annual memorial sermon. Wednesday's speakers included Dr. Peterson of Chicago, Rev. J. F. Brinkman of Roodhouse and Dr. N. J. Hilton of Alton.

Tuesday night there was a parade of a hundred men, headed by the White Hall band, just prior to a men's banquet, the purpose of which was to form a Baptist Brotherhood of Greene and Jersey counties. The matter was left to an executive committee of seven, of which the chairman is Pastor L. E. Ellison of White Hall. Sanction was given the movement during the consideration of business in the convention proper. It had its inception in the notable men's movement in the local church, which has the largest Men's Bible class of any Sunday school in this section of the state, and which has received widespread notice.

A detour was established between White Hall and Roodhouse Wednesday while the work of resurfacing and oiling the stretches of dirt road is carried out in the most effective way. The proposal for placing this bad section of road in proper condition had its inception with the White Hall Chamber of Commerce, Roodhouse coming in with a full share of the expense. The White Hall road machinery is being employed on the job.

An unending run of chautauques and fish fries over this section is to have a change next week with the coming for the first time in Greene county of "The Covered Wagon," which appears in Princess theater Monday Tuesday and Wednesday nights. The magnificent theater has been on vacation along with other White Hall business concerns during the chautauqua season, and Manager Lyman appears to have made a master stroke in bringing such an attraction for the reopening of the theater season.

Robert E. Singleton, city oil inspector, which position he has held for several years, has come to realize that his position is one that demands closer attention. Mr. Singleton is searching the legal status of his office with the view of determining the extent of his authority and responsibility, and his search is being extended to various government agencies as to the sort of equipment with which he should be regaled. With the vast increase in the use of gasoline and oils, Mr. Singleton proposes to make his office of the largest usefulness in seeing that the public is provided with a grade of these things that meets with proper test.

United States." He told of the beginnings of the LaFollette movement and added:

"What are the flags and what are the battle lines in this campaign? On one side stands President Coolidge on the constitution of the United States and the American flag.

"On the other is dangerous and untried radicalism presented by Robert M. LaFollette under the red flag.

"They talk to me of the communists' strength in the west," he said. "I know there is little of that in reality for I have lived here and I know the temper of the people of the west.

"The farmers of the west no doubt have had cause to be discontented but I want to tell you right now that here is a difference between radicalism of the section in New York known as the East Side and the portion of Chicago west of Madison street and the farmers of the west. The farmers of the west are not against the existing order of things."

Applause interrupted the nominee as he proceeded with his prepared address and finally he stopped and exclaimed:

"The purpose of this speech is not to get people to applaud but to get them to think."

Books and Those Who Write Them

New Norwegians

CHILDREN OF THE AGE. By Knut Hamsun. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1924.

CARL VAN VECHTEN

CARL VAN VECHTEN IN ANOTHER NOVEL

"The Tattooed Countess" is Amusing and Satirical Tale of Main Street.

Carl Van Vechten's new book, "The Tattooed Countess" (Knopf) is a tale of Main Street in the days of dip shirts, waistcoats, and spools, golden oak furniture, and flinch parties. The countess with the tattooed wrist and the shabby morals returned to her Iowa home before the reign of the flapper, when rouge was known as paint and lived in obscurity, if it polluted the bureau drawer at all.

But thus handicapped, the countess did a thoroughly good job of cradle-snatching and went back to Paris, Monte Carlo, and points Continental with the finest youth in Maple Valley in tow. Fifty years were as nothing to her when she really struck her gait.

"The Tattooed Countess" is highly amusing and satirical, but not nearly as gay or as naughty as "The Blind Bow-Boy." Van Vechten appears a trifle more studied in the Iowa background than when he is dealing with New York or Paris. But there is a wealth of wit and sophistication in the book. The fact that he calls it a romantic novel with a happy ending, then recounts the affair of a fifty-year-old dame with a high school boy, gives some idea of what to expect.

In the New York Evening Post for last Saturday, W. Orton Tewson gives an interesting sketch of Van Vechten in his earlier days. "It is now well over fifteen years," he writes, "since I first met Carl Van Vechten. He was a tall, slender, graceful young man, distinguished by an impish wit. Oh, yes, he was something of a dandy, too, with quite a passion for art colors—socks, ties, handkerchiefs, to-wit, and a rather original outlook on life. All of which holds good today except that he is not quite as slender and his hair has turned grayish. Perhaps silver is a nicer word.

"Van Vechten had joined the editorial staff of the New York Times. For a while he covered general work by day and amused his colleagues by night while waiting. Micawber like, for something to turn up in the way of a night assignment. Later he had himself transferred to the music department, where, under Richard Aldrich, he blossomed into a full-blown or full-grown—whichever is correct—music critic.

"In those days, Van Vechten and others had a liking for a little French restaurant on Seventh Avenue, known as the Maison Favre, where one could get a satisfying table d'hôte dinner for sixty cents with a bottle of 'red ink' for another fifteen. At the Maison Favre, one dined and wined with young men and women some of whose names are, more or less, household words in the world of the three arts today."

There are a number of minor characters, developed more or less carefully, some with rather humorous intent. In the main, however, they serve as foils for one or another of the principal actors. They also reveal the author's contempt for the peasantry and hatred of officials, especially the clergy. If the flirtations of Jofnufr Salvesen reveal Hamsun's capacity for laughter, the portrait of Julius Lassen is a revelation of bitterness and an example of brutality hardly paralleled outside the work of Swift.

As for the plot, perhaps the less said about it the better, for it is about as slight, as a novel can well have and be a level at all. "Children of the Age" is supremely a novel of character, secondarily a novel of manners designed to show a passing social organization. The author uses incident almost exclusively, either for the revelation of character or for the depiction of social habits.

The action of the plot is mere drift, barely perceptible and without any element of surprise until the very end. Then indeed it takes a most unexpected turn, a turn which enables Hamsun to emphasize the irony of life and to give the final touch of inevitability to the character of his hero. The climax, hardly realized as such in reading, is found in the squire's recognition of his ruin, and his removal to the old mill, which directly leads to the unusual renouement. But the plot is of interest not for itself, but only through the reader's interest in Willaz Holmsen.

Hamsun's style is ultra-modern in its subtlety, in its use of suggestion, in its tendency toward symbolism in its affectation of extreme simplicity. Even those so old-fashioned as to dislike these qualities will recognize Hamsun's mastery of them. "Children of the Age" is truly a masterpiece of modern fiction; but, to borrow the now hackneyed phrase of Lincoln, it is a good book only for those who like that kind of book.

WHITMAN SKETCHES FOUND IN MAGAZINE
It has just been discovered that the Aristidean, a short-lived magazine, edited by Thomas Dunn English, published in 1845, contained four unknown contributions by Walt Whitman. These are "An Arrow Tip," a narrative of 17,000 words, "Shirval, a Tale of Jerusalem," "Richard Parker's Widow," and "Some Fact Romances." The conclusion that these sketches were written by Whitman is based upon an index in the initials follow most of the titles, an accompanying card giving the names in full. The only known complete file of the magazine is owned by a New York collector.

FRENCH BOOK TRADE HAS BANNER SEASON
According to the Biblio, the book trade has fallen upon prosperous days in France. "The price of novels," says this journal, "is twice as high as it was before the war, and sales of twenty-five thousand copies are regarded as quite commonplace."

"It must, of course, always be remembered in estimating the sales of French novels that they sell all over the Continent as well as in France. There are, as a matter of fact, more French books in Italian railway bookstalls than Italian books."

Jazz Bandits

THE COMMON SENSE OF MUSIC. By Sigmund Spaeth. New York: Boni and Liveright, 1924. $2.00.

Reviewed by JOHN KEARNS

The style of this book in general, though not jazzy in a literary way, is about as informal a piece of writing as could be hoped for on the subject of music. "Informal" hardly applies to jazz of any description. But to talk about music in such an informal way as this is something of a novelty. Because music is formal itself, more so than verse.

In music we have almost nothing to compare with our prose in that sense—nothing at least, that has a universal appeal. To be sure, we have recitative, and ad libitum, and rubato, but these are a long way from being regular fare to a music lover, and mostly emphasize the necessity of form by way of contrast.

In the beginning, the author elucidates how some very fine melodies can be built up of two tunes, almost entirely, following the style of the cuckoo call, as exemplified in such popular songs as "Japanese Sandman" and "Carolina in the Morning." And by adding a third, we give expression to the family of familiar bugle calls, and that collection of marches of almost unbelievable variety that can be rendered by a bugle and drum corps. More than that, he says:

"The three notes of a bugle play an important part in some of the most significant melodies of the world. They seem to have set the pattern for all the great national anthems, and the coincidence must have been something more than accidental. Our own 'Star Spangled Banner' starts right in with the notes of the bugle, and announces its most important phrases in six notes derived from the three universal tones."

And after similar observations on the German, French, and Russian national airs, he goes on: "And when you can do so much with three tones, it is easy to believe that four were formerly enough for an entire scale."

Then follows an interesting analysis of various familiar and popular melodies, including "Three o'clock in the Morning," "Sweet Adeline," the Merry Widow waltz, and a whole chapter to demonstrate that, after all, most popular music is classical music that we do not recognize. In fact, the classics are "some pickles" for the tune-theft, and the majority of the popular writers have looted them without compunction. till at present there is hardly a theme of any significance by a classical composer that has not been dragged out of its peaceful environment and made to disport itself in cabarets and dance halls, piped through saxophones, or canned in gutta-percha for the delectation of those who are accustomed to sneer at the classics as such. How often we hear said, "Popular music has tunes, but classical music has none," or "The classical stuff is over our heads."

According to the author, modern kings of jazz, such as Paul Whiteman and Vincent Lopez, with the help of skilled composers, have made dance versions of every kind of classical music from Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata to MacDowell's "To a Wild Rose," from Chopin's Funeral March to the Hungarian Rhapsodies of Liszt. Read how "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows" was made out of Chopin's Fantasia Impromptu, and "The Castle of Dreams," the hit of "Irene," from the same composer's "Minute Waltz," note for note.

To be sure, the best composers before this borrowed occasionally, sometimes habitually. Brahms, he says, saved much good folk music from going to oblivion, as did Haydn, Schubert, and Beethoven. Still, it is to be asked if the depredations of the modern jazz bandits will result in saving anything to the credit of the past. It is to be asked if the depredations of the modern jazz bandits will result in saving anything to the credit of the past. It is to be asked if the depredations of the modern jazz bandits will result in saving anything to the credit of the past.

After all, however, "plagiarism is not the greatest sin of art, least of all of music. The unforgivable crimes are dullness, ugliness, and insincerity, and the unforgivable crimes are dullness, ugliness, and insincerity, and the unforgivable crimes are dullness, ugliness, and insincerity."

Percy Lubbock's "Roman Pictures" has been awarded this year's Femina Vie Heureuse Prize, according to an announcement by the Femina Vie Heureuse Committee of England. "Earlham." Mr. Lubbock's preceding book, is also a prize-winner, having received the James Tait Black prize.

Boni and Liveright announce that they will publish two important new books by Dr. Sigmund Spaeth. They are "Beyond the Pleasure Principle" and "Group Psychology and the Analysis of the Ego."

SHIP OF DREAMS

My love and I built a fairy boat
And sailed it through skies afar;
On the fleecy foam it trembled aloft
Till wrecked on a burning star.

And sorrowing we gazed our fill,
And followed the boat with sighs;
Then lo! we beheld it floating still,
Each in the other's eyes.

Unwearied, calm, serene, we see thee stand,
Thy beauty marred by time's ungentle hand,
But all unchanged thy poise, thy buoyant grace.

Defying circumstance with faith sublime,
Dauntless despite the ravages of time—
Thou hast a challenge for our weakling race!

RAFAEL SABATINI IS POPULAR NOW

Tales of Italo-English Romancer Have Enormous Demand in This Country.

With the recent reissue of "Bardelys the Magnificent" and the announcement that Houghton Mifflin Company are printing a uniform collected edition of his works in thirteen volumes, Rafael Sabatini may be fairly said to have "arrived." This gifted writer, whose books have sold, in America alone, to the number of more than half a million, is represented on the stage and in the motion-picture theater, as well as on the printed page. "He allures," says Current Opinion, "the fascinations." And in the eyes of at least one critic (Edwin F. Edgett, of the Boston Transcript), he is "the preeminent story-teller of our era."

For Sabatini, as for Joseph Conrad, English in an adopted language. He was born in Central Italy in 1875. His mother was an English woman, and his father the Maestro-Cavaliere Vincenzo Sabatini.

His first book, "The Lovers of Yvonne," was published in 1902; and his first addition to his writing, he directed a publishing house in England for five years and during the War served in the Intelligence Department of the British War Office.

Sabatini's tales are not restricted to one country or to one period of time, but roam the entire continent of Europe, touching the northern coasts of Africa and South America, and ranging in time from the fifteenth to the nineteenth centuries. There are tales of France in the days of the Terror; of Portugal during Wellington's campaign; of the Mediterranean; and the Barbary Corsairs early in the reign of Elizabeth; of the Caribbean in the heyday of the pirate kings; of the Spanish Maine; of Italy during the Renaissance; of London at the time of the Restoration; and of England in various periods.

His favorite among his novels is "Scaramouche." "Perhaps," he remarks, "this is inspired by gratitude, for 'Scaramouche' was my Columbus. He discovered America for me."

Alfred Doblin, who is one of the foremost exponents of German expressionism, presents in his latest novel, "Berge, Meere und Giganten," a new form of Utopia. He depicts the humanity of the future determined to free Greenland of ice, and nature rising in its might against mankind and resolving it into nothingness. There are pictures of great power and vividness in the book which is characterized by daring imagination.

Looking at Life

THE IRONIC HUMANIST. By Charles M. Perry. Iowa City, Iowa: The Midland Press, 1924.

Reviewed by ROY FREDERICK SWIFT

If there be any unity of standpoint to be found in these essays, it is perhaps the doctrine that the violent contrasts in human experience "must be conceived as organic and social complements of each other," supported by a hazy if not bad metaphysics. The titles of the essays in this volume are as follows: "Metamorphoses of Satan," "The Obligation of Being Immortal," "The Spiritual Vagabond," "The Moral Zodiac," "The Fighting Chance for Peace," "Absolution for Heretics," and "Providence by Accident." They may be read in any order, or rather in no order. If the reader thinks, as many do, that the problem of war and peace is the greatest of current problems, he will perhaps turn first to see what the "fighting chance" is. Here is a concrete problem, and here ought to be found the note of reality.

This essay is well worth reading. A wide range of factors is discussed, and the gist of the problem found in the fact that we live in a constantly changing world. This furnishes a basis for criticism of war prevention by machinery. The author is hopeful, sympathetic, and tries to understand, but no fighting chance is discovered. Hope, sympathy, even understanding, will not suffice to control the changing currents of life.

"The Spiritual Vagabond" sounds human. The author here discusses spiritualism, which will also attract the attention of many readers. The spiritualistic metaphysics is rejected, and another substituted which makes of the universe an organism in which all individuals throughout all time are permanent members—a sort of Wordsworthian great "Society of the noble living and the noble dead."

The suggestion is made that the subconscious may be the abode of these seemingly dead and absent individuals. It is this group of personalities which the spiritualists attempt to communicate with but by a method which the author rejects. He suggests that the best method of getting communication is through literature and music, detailed instructions being omitted. Automatic writing, also, while perhaps less respectable, may prove useful for this purpose.

The spiritualist, the author says, "tries to get by a seance what ought to be won by hard service in the open world of men and women, or by real achievement in the arts and sciences." This, I think, is the best thing in the whole book. It applies to many other forms of human effort. It is a survival of magic in modern life—the attempt to achieve an end by some irrelevant means.

It is an important element also in the criticism of the League of Nations; the other feels discouragement of many of its supporters. The one argues that since the League exists and the world not by that fact transformed, it is useless; the other feels discouraged on precisely the same grounds. Both expect a magic performance, forgetting that no end can be reached except by use of the actual means of which it is the end, all human achievements following not upon desires but upon the operation of processes existing in the objective world.

There are other essays which are little more than commonplaces dressed up in more or less novel form. "The Moral Zodiac" attempts to assimilate human nature to animal nature on the basis of instincts common to both. The continuity of life between men and animals is the pilgrimage of the human soul. "Metamorphoses of Satan" exhibits the changes in the disguises which evil takes and which gives us new sins.

"The Obligation of Being Immortal" seems to be the obligation to participate in a social order which, when complete, is the world at large, from eternity. Death is not a terminal point on a line but a point in a solid—perhaps an incident in the life of a complete self. This idea of participation in a larger life is discussed in "Absolution of Heretics." In the concluding essay, "Providence by Accident," an attempt is made to formulate this metaphysics in terms of personality—the enlarged self, the universe, is a person.

There is much of value in these essays. The author teaches a liberal social philosophy and is acquainted with current problems of the social order. There is also, as I think, some bad metaphysics, something of the trivial, not a little that is crude, and much that is difficult to see any meaning in.

It lacks also the intellectual distinction that has characterized the products of humanism. The word humanism has so uncertain a meaning in modern times that it is useless perhaps to use it in a discussion. I cannot omit, however, to take exception to the first line of the Foreword in which it is said that humanism is usually sentimental. That is certainly not true of the great humanistic tradition, absurd as applied to Greek humanism.

AMERICAN MERCURY HAS GOOD ANCESTRY

Magazine Recently Established Has Interesting Namesake, Founded in 1784

The success of Alfred A. Knopf's American Mercury, under the editorship of Henry L. Mencken and George Jean Nathan, brings to mind the original American Mercury, a famous old New England periodical founded by Joel Barlow in 1784 and published until 1830.

Book Notes reminds us that Joel Barlow, in whose footsteps Mr. Mencken and Mr. Nathan are following, was a remarkable man. Of Anglo-Saxon ancestry, he was brought up in a puritanical home, and tried his hand successively at everything from book-selling to diplomacy. He was one of the famous group known as the "Hartford Wits."

When Barlow launched The American Mercury, he immediately won a big following among the undergraduates of American colleges. He ran the story of Captain Cook's last voyage. There was great interest in this story, as a Dartmouth college student named Ledyard was Cook's corporal of marines. Barlow got the Mercury off to a good start, and then gave up his editorship of the paper.

At the time of the launching of the Mercury, Barlow was in partnership with a man named Babcock, who was of the blonde Nordic type. They kept a general store, and sold books as well. There are several advertisements of new and forthcoming books. But perhaps these are of lesser interest today than the following: "For Thanksgiving Barlow & Babcock have just received for sale at their store near the State House, excellent Alsip, Ginger, Pepper, and every other foreign article requisite to furnish a complete Pumpkin Pie. Raisins for the Cake; Sugar and choice Spirits for the Philp. To continue the warmth of the body when the festival is over, they have Baizes, Mittens, Warming-Pans," etc.

In looking over the numbers of the original Mercury, Book Notes observes that our modern writers do not seem to strike such sledgehammer blows; they seem to be less cynical, and more tolerant of people and institutions. "Messrs. Mencken and Nathan in the new American Mercury seem to be following a milder, happier, more uplifting policy than the editors of the old New England periodical whose traditions they are carrying on."

There will be a particularly joyous reunion at the opening of the American Legion's state convention at Champaign-Urbana August 31, when Kathryn Browne, the young prima donna mezzo of the Chicago Civic Opera Company, meets the Illinois doughboys and sings for them again "Khaki Sammy," "Over There," and other songs with which she entertained them in the crude "Y" huts behind the trenches in France.

As the only American grand opera star who volunteered her services as an overseas entertainer, and who helped the boys fight the battles of homesickness and despair, Miss Browne is always in demand at legion gatherings.

A typical American girl, her patriotism is not a veneer. She is not only an active member of the Women's Overseas League, but of the Daughters of the American Revolution, being of Revolutionary stock and having had ancestors in the Lexington alarm and at Bunker Hill.

General Pershing, from whom Miss Browne received a medal in recognition for her services in France, will be present at the meeting and is anticipating with pleasure again hearing the young singer.

THE WORLD'S BEST Blood Medicine

Menus for a Family

Breakfast—Cantaloupe, whole wheat cooked cereal, top milk or cream, crisp bacon, corn muffins, butter, honey, coffee or cocoa, orange juice.

Luncheon—Cream of corn soup, toasted bread sticks, tomato salad, bran bread and butter sandwiches, iced tea or milk.

Dinner—Consomme, baked fish, baked potato, steamed spinach, fruit salad, cup custard, coffee.

This menu is planned for the woman who must be her own cook and cook for adults and children. In this day of scientific feeding for children between the ages of 4 and 11 many mothers find it almost necessary to prepare separate meals for their "juniors." The aim of these menus is to furnish nourishing, easily digested food at the family table quite as suitable for youngsters as grown-ups.

A perfectly healthy child of 9 or 10 years should be able to digest a "new moon" of cantaloupe but orange juice is preferable for a younger child or an older one with a rather delicate digestion. If the child will drink plain milk it is more desirable than cocoa.

Honey is an excellent sweet for children. Without the comb for the youngest. The cream of corn soup for luncheon is the "main dish" of the meal and is planned specially for the children.

Fresh tomatoes, pared and sliced and seasoned with salt and pure olive oil can be included in the luncheon for the 8-year-old child, younger than that the tomatoes should be free from seeds and slightly seasoned with salt.

The milk can be omitted at nighttime, but may be welcomed about 3 o'clock in the afternoon by the child who is very active and a bit undernourished.

Consomme, baked potato, spinach and custard with a whole wheat bread and butter sandwich should form the children's dinner.

Cream of Corn Soup Eight ears sweet corn, 2 cups milk, 1 slice onion, 2 tablespoons butter, 1 tablespoon flour, 2 teaspoons sugar, 1 teaspoon salt, 1-8 teaspoon pepper.

Cut through the center of each row of corn kernels. Cut a thin slice from the top of the kernels and scrape out the heart and milk of the corn with the blunt edge of the knife. Put corn in stew pan and add sugar and onion. Pour over enough boiling water to cover. Cook 15 minutes. Rub through a puree strainer. Melt butter, but do not let bubble. Stir in flour and when smooth slowly add milk, stirring constantly. Add corn, salt and pepper and heat, but do not let boil.

Walter Johnson Pitches Masterly Game Until Forced to Retire With Injured Hand—Goslin Stars—Score 5 to 1.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—The Washington club increased its lead in the American League race here today, winning the second game of the series with the New York Yankees, 5 to 1. The veteran Walter Johnson, after a great exhibition of pitching, had to retire in the eighth inning, when he injured his right arm in stopping a hot liner from Schang's bat. He struck out seven men, getting Meusel three times.

New York had seven men left on bases in the second, third and fourth innings. In the fourth inning New York filled the bases with none out but failed to score. Bush also pitched well but Washington made the best of its six hits. Goslin, yesterday's batting star, got a home run, and two singles today. He scored three runs and drove in a fourth. During the two games Goslin has driven out seven hits for nineteen bases.

GALLOPING GOLF
Galloping golf is exclusive form of pastime featuring aristocratic indolence in advanced stages.

TO BE GALLOPING GOLFER YOU MUST OWN STABLE IN NEWPORT, OFFICE IN WALL STREET AND MANSION IN RIVERSIDE DRIVE.

It's nobby sport for scions of wealth, commuting members of royalty, haughty head waiters and others who can order demi-tasse without blushing.

You use horses instead of caddies in mounted golf, except you don't use them so hard. . . . A full-grown horse will stand only so much cussing.

England and America cross infuriated mallets for polo horrors of two continents next month, with U. S. G. A. rules prevailing. . . . This means all fashionable drinking must be done on clubhouse veranda.

Outcome of international match will settle definitely and beyond gray flicker of doubt whether infants brought up on canned okra soup are superior to those who chew plug cut by instinct.

Polo is gently reminiscent of biped golf in that proficiency entitles players to dress up like a cross between commander of Holy Springs, Ills., home guards and pancake chef at Child's.

You wear knee-length boots, netty duck knickers, open-face sport shirts and lofty look of scorn for anybody whose name isn't boisterously embroidered in blue book.

TAKES A BRAVE GUY TO BE A GALLOPING GOLFER . . . TAKES A BRAVE GUY EVEN TO DRESS LIKE ONE.

Etiquette demands you stop play and apologize if your head inadvertently comes in contact with downward swish of opponent's mallet. . . . Real good mallets can't be picked up every day.

Polo horses are picked for alertness. . . . Some are said to be almost human in their intelligence.

To us, however, this sounds like going out of your way to take a knock at a defenseless quadruped.

The Strength of the Weak Sex

With Every Muscle Taut and Every Fiber Strained, Molla Mallory Sends a Tennis Ball Hissing Across the White Net

This pictorial ensemble gives you an excellent idea of the strenuous activity which marks the play of tennis players in major championships—even the women players.

Molla Mallory, many times national champion, is shown sending the ball thundering across the court. Note the whipcord muscles in her neck and steel-like sinews in her hands.

Mr. P., hitting Dempsey with the punch which catapulted the champion over the ropes and out of the ring, never made more complete use of his power than did Mrs. Mallory in fighting for this vital point.

INDIANS BEAT SOX IN TENTH INNING

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 29.—Myatt's single following a pass to Speaker and a sacrifice by Sewell, enabled Cleveland to defeat Chicago in the tenth inning here today, 5 to 4.

Uhlir outpitched Robertson, fanning six batters but his support failed in the fifth inning and the White Sox scored three men.

HOSPITAL BATTLES CAPPS TEAM TO TIE

It takes some team to hold its own against the Capps team, two-time champs of the Twilight League, therefore, Burl May's State Hospital aggregation must be some team as they did that little thing Friday evening on the hospital grounds the tilt going an agreed seven innings and the score reading seven all when play was suspended. The tie will be played off at a later date.

The batteries were: Capps—Towers and McDaniel; State Hospital—Walker and Rose.

The State will meet the Springfield State Garage team on the hospital field this afternoon at 3 o'clock and the general public is cordially invited to witness the contest.

One accident marred the contest Friday afternoon when Leonard Shelton at second base for Capps had a finger badly split by a wild pig, the player being forced to retire from the game.

Billy Evans SAYS

The generally accepted belief in baseball that pitchers cannot hit is being soundly disproved.

The modern day pitchers are helping their game by being able to insert a timely bingle here and there.

As a matter of fact there never was a logical reason for the belief that pitchers could not hit.

A glance over the batting averages of the major leagues shows any number of pitchers with a rating of .300 or better.

Several American League managers often use one of their star pitchers in the role of pinch hitter. This gives some idea as to the real batting ability of certain pitchers.

The great Walter Johnson, pitcher extraordinary, is also a consistently good hitter. Fred Heilmann of Philadelphia often gets the pinch ball from Connie Mack.

Joe Shauts and George Uhle of Cleveland are much feared by opposing pitchers. Wingard, the sensational rookie of the St. Louis Browns, takes a healthy cut at the ball. Cooper of Pittsburgh, Sheehan of Cincinnati and Yde of Pittsburgh take a mean cut at the ball.

Many of the old-time pitchers labored under the belief that the pitcher was doing his bit if he twirled effectively, even though he never made a base hit.

As a result, a great many pitchers never took the batting end of the game seriously and thus were greatly handicapped in this respect.

No doubt the lively ball and the deeds of Babe Ruth inspired many pitchers to greater batting feats.

The last five or six years in baseball have been featured by slugging. Taking a healthy swing has been the keynote of batting success. The pitchers joined in the movement and have profited thereby.

The pitcher who can hit, incidentally field, adds much to the strength of his club. Likewise his chances of victory. Realizing this, a majority of twirlers are taking their batting seriously.

Most pitchers now indulge in batting practice with as much zest as the champion batsman. Once upon a time they merely swung at the ball in a haphazard manner; often took little or no batting practice prior to the game.

Those days are over. Many pitchers are as fussy about their batting average as games won.

Ability to hit is largely a matter of confidence plus a certain amount of natural ability.

For years pitchers stepped to the plate with but one thought, getting out as quickly as possible. Now things are different.

In these days, if you miss a strike on a pitcher while he is at bat, or call him out on a doubtful third one, he can be as critical as the star batter.

Single G. paced both his winning miles in 2:01 1-4.

GIANTS DEFEATED BY PITCHING OF VANCE

BROOKLYN, Aug. 29.—When Dazzy Vance of Brooklyn struck out eight Giants today he advanced his strikeout record for the season to 202, five more than his record for 1923. It was his eleventh straight victory this year, making his total 23 victories and four defeats. His pitching today enabled Brooklyn to defeat New York 3 to 1.

St. Louis Star Forced to Leave Game With Wrenched Ham After Getting One Hit—Score 12 to 5.

CHICAGO, Aug. 29.—St. Louis hit the ball for extra bases today and defeating the Cubs 12 to 5.
